Q & A for crazy puppy parents
Check out some new pet food lines. Solid gold, Champion and Fromm's newer low cost Classic.

Dear Diann,

We have this new puppy, shes 6 months now. Crazy as I've ever seen, part Jack Russell and who knows, but she is small. Maybe 5 lbs. I didn't think a small dog could be so crazy, and we need help. She is non stop all day, all night, never rests, into everything she can fit in her mouth which is allot considering her size. She chews things, potty's in the house, jumps all over me every time I sit. If its to eat, read, or do nothing, she has to be there. That wouldn't be so bad, except she demands my attention. If she'd lie still she could stay there, but she wants me up so I'll play with her. Will we ever have a life other than this little Misha? We love her, but sometimes think at our over the hill age! we need a break. Any ideas? We knew Jack Russells need allot of exercise- but she's beyond that.
Carol & Ben

Dear Carol & Ben,

Misha has you wrapped around her little tail and she knows it. She is seeking attention and getting it from you. When she says "Move" you do it. You are obeying her. It's not just Jack Russell's, any dog can become an attention seeker when allowed to be. They all need exercise, but, yes, she has gone beyond that. She is in charge of you. In the hopes of having a cute little lap dog, you have catered to her every whim and now she expects it. You must reverse that ASAP if you want a life of your own. Now, while she is young, the longer it goes on, the worse she will get. here are some simple things you can do to get her on the right track:

Stop doing what she says when she says it. You have a right to sit and eat, read, or do nothing. Start by giving her a "Place" of her own. A soft dog bed, blanket, rug. Anything that you can name such as "GO TO YOUR PLACE" and use it the instant she jumps up on you. make her understand- "Your Place" is yours. her "Place" is hers. Make her stay there. Even if you have to leash her to a table or wrap a leash around your foot. You need to be in charge of her. It's natural for a dog that doesn't have human leadership to assume the leader role. That is what she's doing. Don't do what she wants every time she barks at you for something. Go into another room, shut the door, and let her throw her fit. When she's quite, come out calmly and have her sit or lie down for a minute or two. This is teaching her that attention seeking behavior makes you leave. When you come back, give her a few commands, enforce them and follow through. Make her sit for every meal, treat, pet, walk, anything she likes she should earn it. Keep in mind, a dog does what is rewarding for them at the time, and they remember it. If you give her what she wants every time she wants it, you are rewarding her. AND: Reward behavior she gives that you want. If she's lieing quietly, praise that with a pet. If she sits on her own for good manners, reward that with a small treat or petting. She will learn she's not the one in charge of the rules of the house. BE CONSISTENT. NO MAYBE'S OR SOMETIMES. ALL THE TIME!!!. A good class will really help you get on the right track. A trainer can see first hand and guide you into the correct way to deal with her. Don't waste time. I promise you, she will get more and more demanding as she gets older if you don't act on this now. contact me with any more questions please. There is no need to suffer.
