Schedules* Dog eats dish towel* Food sales

Dear Diann,

This isnt the usual Q & A, but an attempt at educating other owners on how something so simple can take their pets life. It is hard to write this, even after 3 weeks, but I know it needs to be done.

Our wonderful perfect Golden, that just turned one was left out of her crate for a few hours one night. I had mixed feelings, but she had always been so good, the best dog ever. Why crate her at a year old, we were only gone for less than 2 hours. We got home and there was no sign of her. The house had an errie quitness to it that I didnt like. Calling for her her did no good as we hunted all over. She was found in the laundry room, looked as if she was heading to the back door where I always took out of. She had a half a dish towel down her throat, other half had choked her to death. No amount of cpr helped, so off we went to the emergancy vet, hope against hope something could be done, knowing better all the way there. It turned out there had been some turkey juice on the dish towel. I had been making souo that morning, and like a dummy, hung the dishtowel on the fridge. I never do that. They always go into the laundry basket. She couldnt resist the smell of that turkey juice, and began eating the towel in hopes of getting goodies off it. Nothing will ever replace her I know. But, if this will save just one pet from death, and an owner the horror of going through this, and of course I know it was my fault. Accidents happen, but that doesnt make it better. Please if yoi would get the message out for me I'd feel at least I've doe some good.

Thanks Diann

I am very sorry for your loss and I know nothing can make it better. Time will help, and the fact you blame yourself will take even more time to get over if ever. but, writting me, I cab promise will save more than one pet. Owners will realize how easy it is for accidents to happen. You shouldnt blame yourself. I know you always will. You are doing a wonderful service for all who read this.
