DID YOU KNOW? TEACHING IMPULSE CONTROL

This is meant to teach your dog to be calm, say please, and have manners when he wants something. A dog with out impulse control will learn that by being out of control, rude, pushy, is learning to tell the owners what to do, when and how. If that sounds like your dog, your not alone. Everyone wants to please their dogs, give them as much love, attention, food, toys that they want. BUT- if you let your dog "Command" you, you are teaching him to be the leader. You can have both: First, are some very important rules you need to teacg your dog. follow through and always be CONSISTENT.

A dog will not have any reason or desire to obey you anytime if he knows he can tell you what to do.

Teaching impulse control isn't that hard. It simply means that when your dog wants something- a meal, play time, a walk, treat, a new toy you should teach your dog to SIT, this is saying PLEASE. Practice DOWN STAYS OFTEN.

Whatever your dog likes can be used as a reward. Did your dog come when you called? Perfect time to reward with a small bite size treat or a new toy AFTER the dog came to use as a reward. Doing these and other simple things will teach your dog that by being calm, that is the impulse control, he is learning to be patient and wait politely for something good. Impulse control helps a dog in all aspects of their life. They should learn from puppy hood that good things come to those with manners and are calm. Remember you are the human, you are your dogs leader, protector, trainer, and the one he should respect. Your dog will not respect a weak owner that can be bossed by their dog.

Do not give in and follow through with what you want from your dog. This doesn't mean to be rough or mean, it can be as easy as letting your dog know if he doesn't sit and stay for a meal, a walk, sit and wait at the door when it's open, Fine- don't feed at that time, or walk, play, or whatever you were going to do with your dog.

Do that once or twice, your dog will "Get it" same for his meals. Try again in 2 to 5 minutes, it wont take long before your dog "Gets it" Think about these things the next time your dog wants you to do something. Who is really in charge?
