How To Use Healing Clay For Dogs [humans can use this too]

Pelology is the study of earthen clays for therapeutic healing purposes. Whether white, yellow, brown, green or red in color, all clays have one thing in common ... mud. Potent mud.

Humans and animals have been using healing clays as a type of self-care since before history started being recorded. The good thing, however, is that you do not have to be a pelologist to reap the benefits of using clay to heal and care for yourself and your dog.

How does clay work?

Clay works with the body to correct imbalances through the methods of absorption and adsorption. A clay's absorption rate is how fast the clay reaches saturation. Its adsorption rate is how well it holds onto or binds with organic and inorganic substances.

These processes vary among different types of clays. The beauty of clay is that chemically, it is a negatively charged substance. Most toxins are positively charged, so this polarity makes clay irresistible to viruses, harmful bacteria, parasites, gases and various other substances. What is most amazing is that clay does this all without harmful side effects.

Benefits of using healing clays

Healing clays:

1. Eliminate internal parasites, fluids, gases, toxins and heavy metals
2. Support a strong immune system by balancing pH levels and supporting healthy intestinal flora
3. Help detoxify the digestive tract

Types of healing clays

There are many types of healing clays found throughout the world. Let's discuss the most common.

Bentonite

is a green clay that can vary in mineralization according to where the clay is sourced. Bentonite has a high absorption rate and unique chemical structure. What makes bentonite unique is that it is a clay that has surface particles that are both negatively and positively charged. Clay is similar to an ant in that it can carry particles three to four times its size and hold on to them as they travel outside the body.

Here are more reasons why bentonite clay is good for your dog!

Click on bendonite clays webpage for more healing.

Montmorillonite

is popularly known as French green clay. This type of clay is perfect to consume internally because it rapidly detoxifies and disinfects the body. Montmorillonite gets its green color from the algae rich dried up sea beds of the Mediterranean.

When hydrated with spring or purified water, Montmorillonite binds to toxins and holds them safe so they can be excreted out of the body, making French green clay invaluable for removing blood toxins, bacteria and heavy metals.

Another benefit of Montmorillonite is that it has anti-inflammatory properties. It is high in silica and supports the production of fascia and connective tissue to help decongest arthritic and muscular conditions.

Illite

Illite is a fine particle, non-expansive green clay known to seek out undesirable microbes and ailing tissues. Rich in sea minerals, it helps support the body's own healing mechanisms by having the highest adsorption rate. This gives illite the ability to act as a magnet for toxins. It is by far the best choice for detoxification purposes.

Redmond clay

Redmond clay can be used internally and externally. Its high sodium and calcium content make it perfect for drawing out infections and bacteria topically. As a poultice, Redmond clay can be used for joint care, insect bites, stings and any other topical inflammations.

How to use healing clays

When you look at the different types of healing clays, you can't help but notice that each clay is unique in its structure and how it reacts to the body.

Clay also has a wide range of colors, such as red, brown, green, white and blue. White and green clays are used internally while brown, red, yellow and blue clays are used externally. What I love about healing clays is that they can be used with other forms of treatment

Guidelines for safe and effective use

- Never let clay come in contact with metal. Use glass or wooden containers and utensils. Store your clay in glass containers so it will remain sterile and safe for first aid use.
- Use pure filtered
- Treat one malady at a time (this is important).
- Don't feed your dog for at least two hours after an internal clay treatment.
- Wait at least two hours after your dog ingests clay to give any medications or herbs.
- clay can be used daily until your dog is healed. If clay treatment does not improve your dog's condition, discontinue use.

How to make and apply a poultice

Poultices are little masses of material, in this case clay, wrapped in clean cotton or muslin. Ingredients

- 1 lb pure green clay
- half cup cool spring or purified water. Unbleached cotton or muslin
- Mix clay with enough water to make a thick paste
- Spread a layer of paste with a wooden spoon on to the center of the muslin, about one inch deep and approximately two inches bigger than the area to be treated
- Apply the poultice clay side down and leave it alone until the clay pulls away from the skin. This indicates that the treatment is finished
- Repeat daily until healed

Dry topical application of clay

Dry application can be used as a disinfectant in treating wounds. Clay can immediately stop bleeding wounds and prevent scab formation. This type of application has been successfully used in the treatment of hot spots, stings, bites, and severe itching.

Dog Health Tips

Mix clay powder and water together and make a dry paste. Apply to bleeding wounds and wounds that need to heal without scabbing. This method can help prevent abscesses and keep a healing wound from itching.

Internal dosages of clay

Internal uses for clay include parasites, deworming, digestive issues, and detoxification. It can also help remove radiation from the body after cancer treatments.

Ingredients and equipment:

- 1 tbsp bentonite, illite, or montmorillonite clay
- 4 oz cool spring or purified water for each tsp of clay 1 oz needleless syringe
- Mix the correct measurement of clay with water as specified above
- Let this slurry stand overnight
- Give to your dog with a syringe or in some wet food the next morning on an empty stomach
- Wait at least two hours to feed full breakfast
- Make sure your dog has access to unlimited fresh water throughout the treatment

Amount

Give 1/4 tsp clay for each 20 lbs of weight. This applies to both humans and dogs. Sometimes using clays internally can cause rapid detox, which can result in constipation or diarrhea. If this should occur, ease up on the amount of clay you are using and work your way up to the specified amount.

PUPPY MANNERS; 6 weeks @ $85.00 per pup;

Begins Thurs. Sept. 24th @ 11 a.m. 60 to 75 minutes a class

Fun, social skills, basic manners, games & more

The most important time of your dog's life & is known as the 'critical periods'; when a puppy needs to be socialized to other puppies, people, new things, and new places and learn manners that will carry him through his whole life.

As puppies grow, they become fearful of things they aren't exposed to, that fear often leads to aggressive dog's. And dog gets left behind on family trips, left alone as an outside backyard dog. Very Sad.

At Diann's Happy Tails Puppy Manners class your puppy will get basic manners needed. the social skills with other puppies during the off leash puppy play time. He will get the exposure to new people and have a wonderful time. It requires at least one set of vaccinations at the start of class.

The Puppy Manners class is $85.00 for a 6 week, 75 minute course, once a week.

All puppy graduates will receive a $10.00 off the Basic Class.

Pre registration & Current vaccinations are required; Pups @ first class

Small bite size training treats; Secure training equipment.

No chain collars. No retractables.
